"Taking Junk and Turning it into Gold!"

Opening Thoughts:

This was a fun little project to work on, really. Ever since reading Igadev's coverage of Shin Kamen Rider on his website, I'd been interested in seeing what made the poor guy sick. That wasn't helped after seeing an unsold copy of his movie (God, I'd love it if someone would eat it ...). And then a random anon on 4Chan posted this manga... Well, needless to say, I was a touch inspired. After putting out a few requests on a message board, I ran into KaaGaiGar and the rest was history. Sadly, thanks to personal problems in both our lives, it wound up taking about two months to get done, but we should be able to speed things up for our next work together... the Kamen Rider ZII manga!

See you all then!

A Translator's Note of Grief and a Big "Screw You" to Life in General:

Well, I've finally finished Shin's translation. I can't believe it took 2 months to complete, despite it being a 2 hour effort at most. To be honest, there were several times when I questioned myself as to why I was doing it. I found two reasons:

The first being that I made a promise to SS, and I keep promises.

The second being that I'm actually free for the first time in ages, since my TV got busted open by a WinMute.

You don't see shit like that happen every day.

That, and my passport got drenched in the washer, and it's not even my fault (though my mother acts like it is). And then my PSP charger goes missing, so I have no games, no TV, and an unfinished comic book in front of me.

So what do I do? I finish what I started.

It's been a long journey (started before Christmas), and the only reason why it actually took so long was because my HDD is a bitch, Win9x is a bitch, and my short term memory is an even bigger bitch.

Euh.
